Some NATC academic programs, specifically Health Occupations, require students and faculty to follow the health requirements of the agency that is a clinical affiliation site. Detailed information is identified by the program.

The health requirements could include immunizations and titers reflecting immunity for varicella, measles, mumps, rubella, adult Tdap, influenza and hepatitis B. Other requirements could include certification in basic life support and criminal and caregiver background checks. The programs may be similar in expectations and vary depending on the setting.
